Between Syntax and Semantics

C.-T. James Huang
Contents

Introduction

PART I: QUESTIONS, INDEFINITES AND QUANTIFICATION
1. Move wh in a language without wh-movement
2. LF, ECP, and non-vacuous quantification
3. Existential sentences in Chinese and (in)definiteness
4. The syntax of wh-in-situ
5. Modularity and Chinese A-not-A questions
6. Logical Form
7. Two types of donkey sentences
8. Syntax of the hell

PART II: ANAPHORA AND BINDING
9. A note on binding theory
10. On the distribution and reference of empty pronouns
11. Reconstruction and the structure of VP
12. Logophoricity, attitudes, and ziji at the interface

PART III: LEXICAL STRUCTURE AND EVENTS
13. Lexical structure and syntactic projection
14. Resultatives and unaccusatives: a parametric view

Notes

References
Original publication details

Chapter 1 first appeared in 1982 in the journal The Linguistic Review 1: 369-416. It is reprinted here by permission of Walter de Gruyter.

Chapter 7 (written with Lisa L.-S. Cheng) first appeared in 1996 in the journal Natural Language Semantics 4: 121-163. It is reprinted here by permission of Springer.

Chapter 8 (written with Masao Ochi) first appeared in 2004 in the Proceedings of NELS 34, pp. 279-293.

Chapter 10 first appeared in 1984 in the journal Linguistic Inquiry 15: 531-574. It is reprinted here by permission of the MIT Press.

Chapter 13 first appeared in 1997 in the journal Chinese Language and Linguistics 3: 45-89. It is reprinted here by permission of Academia Sinica.